Saving Zimbabwe is the gripping story of a group of extraordinary black and white Zimbabweans who lived together forming 'The Community of Reconciliation'. They chose love over hate and integration over segregation. They believed in harmony over discord and that loving your former enemies was a higher way of life. Against all odds they succeeded in transforming a region of the nation in to a life-giving community. By example they demonstrated that the course of Zimbabwe could be changed, and provided a working model for the road ahead.

Tragically on 25 November 1987, the sixteen white members of the Community made the ultimate sacrifice and were martyred. Their killers thought they were 'liberating' their people but in fact drove the black community back under the oppressive forces of poverty. Why did they die? This book takes you on a journey to discover the answer to that haunting question and more.

With the current political and economic uncertainty in Zimbabwe, the message of Saving Zimbabwe is more relevant than ever. The country needs transformation which should start in the heart of her people. The destiny of a nation and millions of lives are at stake.
