In 2007, in cooperation with the US Army, Operation Mend was established at UCLA Hospital to reconstruct Marines, soldiers and sailors severely injured by IED's (roadside bombs) in Iraq and Afghanistan. This is their story, told in photographs and interviews of nine young men whose lives were saved by the Brooke Army Burn Center but, due to inevitable scarring, could not take their children to social events or even go to the market because of their appearance. These military heroes courageously chose to undergo multiple surgical procedures that extended over years to be able to return to happy and productive lives. This is the story of the consequences of war told by those who sacrificed greatly. Because of psychological therapy, the love and support of their families, and a caring group of nurses and surgeons, these veterans triumphed. Theirs are stories of hope and love, dedication and courage, qualities that define the character of these men and their families. We hear a great deal about wounded warriors. This book allows the reader to meet them.
